Today, more than two billion people are not free

Barred from participating in the government that has power over their lives, they cannot speak their opinions freely or worship as they choose. In countries where human dignity is not respected, dictators keep individuals from exercising individual rights, render free speech speechless and make servants of those the state is supposed to serve.

Since its founding in 1941, Freedom House has been on the front lines of the struggle for freedom. Freedom House is a clear, forthright and nonpartisan voice for democracy. We champion policies that will expand freedom, both in the U.S. and abroad. We advance freedom's reach by working with local democracy advocates living under dictatorships and tyrannies. And we monitor, measure and explain freedom's condition through studies, reports and articles.

The attainment of freedom ultimately depends on the actions of dedicated men and women who are committed to the transformation of their societies. But experience also demonstrates that outside support can play a critical role in the struggle for democratic rights.

Freedom House was founded by a group of prominent individuals, with Eleanor Roosevelt and Wendell Willkie serving as the organization's first honorary co-chairpersons.

1947

UN General Assembly adopts the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, which was drafted under the leadership of Freedom House honorary chairwoman Eleanor Roosevelt

Our Work

Freedom House translates the values of freedom into a strong tangible impact by combining analysis, advocacy and action. Guided by a nonpartisan, diverse board of trustees, Freedom House has forged an innovative model to promote the expansion of democracy and human rights around the world.

Analysis

The foundation of Freedom House's work is its analysis. We evaluate the components of freedom and leverage our analytical work to strengthen our advocacy and action efforts.

Freedom House's rigorous research methodology used to monitor global freedom has earned us a reputation as the leading source of information on the state of freedom worldwide.

Advocacy

Freedom House is a leading advocate for freedom. We give voice to the voiceless and press the United States and other governments to support the courageous men and women working to fight tyranny, eliminate injustice and build honest and responsive governments in their own communities.

Action

Working directly with democratic reformers on the front lines in their own countries, Freedom House acts as a catalyst for freedom by providing training and support for monitoring and documenting human rights abuses, increasing the free flow of information, and mobilizing citizens to improve their societies.

Voting International human rights groups criticized the Russian military's heavy involvement in the 2005 parliamentary elections in Chechnya, the first vote since separatist uprisings in 1999.

Leo Cherne, an officer of Freedom House, debates Senator Joe McCarthy on "Town Meeting on the Air," a popular radio forum, on how to deal with the communist threat.

1958

Eleanor Roosevelt presents Freedom House's Freedom Award to the Arkansas Gazette for reporting desegregation efforts.

Facing the Future As the North Caucasus struggles with conflict and instability, the American Committee for Peace in the Caucasus at Freedom House helps local human rights groups inform the international community about grave human rights violations and security threats in the region.

Analysis

Over the past several decades, Freedom House has created standard-setting publications that serve as critical resources for policy analysts—both governmental and nongovernmental—and are valuable tools in support of the work of human rights and civic activists worldwide. Freedom House analyses have been integrated into some of the world’s most formative decision-making bodies, shaping the direction and the momentum of the dialogue on freedom and human rights.

Freedom in the World

Since 1972, the Freedom in the World survey has been Freedom House’s flagship publication. Providing an annual evaluation of the state of global freedom, the survey rates countries according to a range of indicators within the broad categories of political rights and civil liberties. Freedom House’s research and ratings process is widely respected as an objective, comparative analysis of the state of essential individual freedoms around the world.

Freedom of the Press

A free and independent media is a fundamental guardian of democracy, ensuring government accountability and promoting the free flow of information within a society. This publication tracks trends in media freedom around the world, ranking the level of press freedom in each country.

Gender Gap Women's Rights in the Middle East and North Africa, a Freedom House publication, details the unequal status of women in 16 countries and one territory.

Freedom House issues a statement asserting that McCarthyism has created an “atmosphere of fear and uncertainty” that damages free expression in the U.S.

1961

Willy Brandt, mayor of blockaded Berlin, receives the Freedom Award for his resistance to Nazism and Communism.

Online Advocacy Rima Al-Rakhawi, a Palestinian human rights activist, works at Freedom House's Washington headquarters on the "Blue Umbrella," an online community of freedom advocates in the Middle East.

Additional Surveys and Special Reports

Examining more specific elements of democratic growth, Freedom House produces two additional annual surveys. Nations in Transit monitors progress and setbacks in democratization in the former communist world of eastern Europe and the former Soviet Union, while Countries at the Crossroads examines government performance in 60 key countries worldwide. Freedom House also issues periodic, region-specific assessments and special reports, including Today's American: How Free?, an in-depth examination of the state of freedom in the post 9/11 United States.

1966

Board member Irving Kristol launches The Public Interest, initially as a Freedom House publication.

1967

Freedom House convenes 14 top Asian scholars to discuss issues related to U.S. military involvement in Vietnam. The report is seen as "a clear call for moderation," and reportedly helped persuade President Lyndon B. Johnson to reduce forces in Vietnam.

The Map of Freedom reflects the findings of Freedom House's Freedom in the World 2008 survey, which rates the level of political rights and civil liberties in 193 countries and 15 related and disputed territories during 2007. Based on these ratings, countries are divided into three categories: Free, Partly Free, and Not Free.

A Free country is one where there is broad scope for open political competition, a climate of respect for civil liberties, significant independent civic life, and independent media.

Partly Free countries are characterized by some restrictions on political rights and civil liberties, often in a context of corruption, weak rule of law, ethnic strife, or civil war.

A Not Free country is one where basic political rights are absent, and basic civil liberties are widely and systematically denied.

Survey Findings*

Freedom Status	Country Breakdown	Population
FREE	90 (47%)	3.03 (46%)
PARTLY FREE	60 (31%)	1.19 (18%)
NOT FREE	43 (22%)	2.39 (36%)
TOTAL	193 (100%)	6.61 (100%)

Advocacy

Supporting Freedom's Frontline Defenders

As one of the world's leading advocates for freedom, Freedom House remains firmly committed to sustaining its momentum. To this end, we press the United States and other governments to support freedom's front line defenders – the courageous men and women who work to give voice to the powerless, bring awareness to injustice, and build honest and responsive governments. Our advocacy draws on our research: we identify the critical challenges to freedom, then mobilize government and nongovernmental forces to respond, amplifying the message of those fighting tyranny on the front lines.

Addressing the Global Crackdown on Freedom

In an effort to stifle opposition voices, a number of governments—most recently Russia, Venezuela, and Iran—have taken major steps to limit the actions of domestic civil society activists and restrict citizens' freedom to associate. Often accomplished through legalistic means, such as requiring lengthy registration processes for NGOs, the restrictions also cut down on the ability of international organizations and governments to assist civil society within these countries. Freedom House is focused on bringing international attention and action to counter this disturbing trend.

First issue released of Freedom at Issue (later renamed Freedom Review), a bi-monthly magazine including discussions of public policy questions related to freedom.

1972

First publication of the Map of Freedom, and the annual survey which later becomes Freedom in the World.

Spotlight on Intergovernmental Bodies

While many of the world's intergovernmental bodies, such as the UN Human Rights Council and the Office for Democratic Institutions and Human Rights of the OSCE, were convened with the explicit purpose of advancing human rights in practice and principle, they are increasingly unable to do so. Instead, many are under direct assault by repressive governments that seek to weaken these bodies' effectiveness and thus lessen public scrutiny of their own regimes. Through articles, events, and one-on-one meetings, Freedom House brings global attention to these bodies' actions, raising awareness of the need to safeguard them from interference by authoritarian governments.

Democracy at Home

Though the majority of our efforts are targeted at repressive regimes, Freedom House is convinced that the support of the United States is crucial to the spread of democracy worldwide. Advocating for an ongoing American commitment to the promotion of freedom around the globe, Freedom House analyzes the government's budget, issues press releases urging the U.S. to hold dictators to account, and retains strong relationships with prominent policymakers. To ensure that the U.S. remains a role model, Freedom House has published a new survey devoted solely to examining the state of freedom in America, Today's American: How Free?

Leadership Freedom House's Board Member Calvin Sims, an award-winning New York Times journalist, presents his new documentary, "Struggle for the Soul of Islam: Inside Indonesia."

First publication of Freedom of the Press, a global survey of media independence produced by Freedom House.

1981

Freedom House trustees urge increased funding for Radio Free Europe and Radio Liberty, continuing Freedom House's support for international broadcasting.

Riding for Rights The National Forum for Youth and Culture in Jordan organized a bicycle ride in conjunction with a parliamentary petition that demanded more laws to protect women.

Action

Freedom House distinguishes itself from other human rights organizations by doing more than monitoring and reporting abuses. Freedom House acts as a catalyst for freedom by providing nonviolent civic activists, youth groups, think tanks, journalists and human rights defenders with the resources they need to advance freedom in their countries.

Defending Human Rights and Safeguarding Justice

Freedom House has developed programs that support human rights defenders throughout the world. In Kyrgyzstan, for example, Freedom House helped to establish the Voice of Freedom, a nationally-registered nongovernmental organization that coordinates the efforts of human rights defenders from across the country. The organization provides these activists with resources and information, and assists them in forming vital networks with like-minded advocates throughout the country, the region, and the world.

Equal Opportunity Freedom House brings together advocates and officials from around the world to share strategies for advancing women's rights.

The Dalai Lama receives the Freedom Award, continuing Freedom House's support for Tibetan freedom begun in the 1980s when Freedom House facilitated the Dalai Lama's first trip to the U.S.

2000

First Community of Democracies meeting held in Warsaw, Poland. Freedom House cosponsors the nongovernmental forum with the Stefan Batory Foundation.

Fresh Perspectives Human rights and civil society activists discuss reform in the Middle East with U.S. Secretary of State Condoleezza Rice as part of Freedom House's New Generation of Advocates program.

Facilitating the Free Flow of Information

Freedom House trains journalists from around the world and provides resources to facilitate public access to information. We provide support to Iran's beleaguered pro-democracy reformers and human rights defenders by connecting them, via the internet, to resources and counterparts worldwide. Gozaar, a monthly, bilingual online magazine, serves as an interactive, inclusive space for the discussion of democracy and human rights in Iran.

Supporting Democratic Civil Society

In an effort to support young democracy advocates for peaceful change from North Africa and the Middle East, Freedom House conducts an exchange program that provides short-term professional fellowships in the U.S. and Europe. In addition to assisting these young journalists, lawyers and civil society advocates in developing stronger skills and professional networks, Freedom House has convened an International Solidarity Committee linking these young activists with prominent individuals in the U.S. and Europe.

Working for the Future

Freedom House helps young leaders in and out of government to develop the expertise and vision they will need to transform their societies. As part of its African Initiative, Freedom House organizes workshops throughout Africa providing young professionals from government and civil society with skills grounded in ethical principles that enable them to lead with integrity.

2002-2004

Freedom House expands global operations, opening offices in Central Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Latin America.

2008

Freedom House publishes Today's American: How Free?, examining the state of freedom in the U.S. today.

Citizens in Action The Albanian organization Mjaft has played a leading role in combating corruption by mobilizing civil society.

The first part of the document discusses the importance of maintaining accurate records of all transactions. It emphasizes that every entry, no matter how small, should be recorded to ensure the integrity of the financial data. This includes not only sales and purchases but also expenses, income, and any other financial activities. The document provides a detailed guide on how to set up a ledger and how to enter data correctly, including instructions on how to handle corrections and adjustments.

The second part of the document focuses on the analysis of the recorded data. It explains how to calculate various financial ratios and metrics that can help in understanding the overall performance of the business. This includes the calculation of profit margins, return on investment, and other key indicators. The document also provides a step-by-step process for interpreting these results and identifying areas for improvement.

The final part of the document discusses the importance of regular audits and reviews. It explains how to conduct an internal audit to ensure that all records are accurate and up-to-date. It also provides guidance on how to prepare for an external audit and how to respond to any findings or discrepancies. The document concludes with a summary of the key points and a final reminder of the importance of maintaining accurate financial records.

MISSION STATEMENT

women are guaranteed.
